But if there has been one principle which that party has professed to hold dear to itself—which it has professed to guard with a devotion as great as its most sacred purposes—it has been the preservation of the credit of the Government and of the States. It has assumed to be the guardian of public credit, State and national. It has preached, and has heretofore, as best it might, practiced the virtue which belongs to that guardianship. But now this strange thing has happened. As soon as the necessity has arisen, when now this strange thing has happened. As soon as the necessity has arisen, when there was material advantage supposed to be in such an unholy compact, this great party, boasting of its record, full of the pretence of honor and honesty, has entered into a bargain, corrupt and corrupting, to barter away the fair fame of Virginia, and to stamp upon the forehead of one of the great States of the Lastern Shore Steamboat Company. DANIEL IN BALTIMORE.

A SPLENDID OVATION TO DISTINGUISHED VIRGINIANS.

[From the Baltimore Gasette.]
THE BANQUET.

When every one had been introduced to the distinguished guests the dining-rooms of the hotel were thrown open, and in a few moments the members of the Daniel Club, their friends, and the guests were busily discussing the ability of fare and testing the opiniel sat at the head of a table facing the other tables in the room, all of which were Ried. On his right were R.

H. Glass, Jr., the president of the Club, Mayor Latrobe, and others. On the lett were General Bradley T. Johnson, Hon. George T. Garrison, Dr. Samuel H. Mofett, Hon. George D. Wise, and others. When the banqueting had been concluded, Nr. Glass in a few words formally introduced Major Daniel, who was received with tremendous cheers and a round of huzzas. During his speech, which followed, he was frequently so vigorously applauded that he was compelled to break of short and wait until the enthusiasm had subsided. It was a perfect ovation, and the enthusiasm had subsided. It was a perfect ovation, and the enthusiasm had subsided. It was a perfect ovation, and the enthusiasm had subsided. It was a perfect ovation, and the enthusiasm had subsided. It was a perfect ovation, and the enthusiasm had subsided. It was a perfect ovation, and the enthusiasm was as generous as it was synontaneous. Major Daniel speake substan

dence new inspirations and new courage. I do not arrogate to myself this tribute as a compliment to the man. For myself I necept but little of the honor of which I feel this occasion is full, but as an expression of affection for the old State by Virginia men in the State of their adoption; as a mark of esteem for a beloved Commonwealth by those who have lost none of their pride in her as great and glorious in her past and her present, and confidence in her future, as such a compliment to me as the appointed representative of what I believe to be the truest and best aspiration of the Old Dominion, I accept, with a heart full of gratitude, your generous expressions. I am a representative of Virginia, a son of the soil of that great and bistoric old Commonwealth; but I do not feel that in Maryland I am an alien or stranger. I have known brave men in Maryland in the days which tried men's souls. I have known them in war as brave; known them in peace, and have never known them in peace, and have never known them to be aught but brave and true men. (Applause.)

in the State, and declare to you that they have broken away from their party and turned broken away from their party and turned their backs upon the men calling themselves representatives of Republicanism who have engaged in this infamous traffic. They are true Virginians and I am pround of them as such.

And let me say to you this: That the honest Democratic party of Virginia has gotten its blood up, and that it will overthrow, horse, foot, and dragoon, Mahone and his allies, the ignorant and unscrupulous, in one great and overwhelming defeat upon the 8th of November, But I do not miderestimate the power of our emiss. I do not fail to appreciate the enormous strength of a collition between the unscrupulous and place-seckers in Virginia and the ignorant and unthinking mass of voters who are taught to follow the Republican banners whether to honor or disgrace. I cannot fail to see how dangerous are such forces backed by the power and patronage of a corrupt Administration. With a voting population of 106,000 Republicans, arrayed behind the renegade Maione and his unscrupulous licutenants, we are facing fearly upon the south, with help and good cheer pouring in from all parts of our common country, with brave hearts and confident hopes, we are moving on to what I can promise you shall be a most glorious and
